Training, Assessing and Responding to Threats

Training builds confidence. Aggressive people, drug-induced violence, hostile acts and the threat of those wishing to harm us is on the rise. Understanding and responding appropriately to threats is an important step in protecting yourself and those around you. Knowing how to respond leading into a situation, during the situation, and once emergency services are on scene will reduce the impact on those around you, reduce business recovery time and in certain circumstances save lives. Training will allow you to achieve these goals. If you or your employees have expressed concern, consider training to alleviate that concern and build confidence.

THE COUNTER THREAT WORKSHOP:

It matters not who plans or executes a hostile act against you, it may be a disgruntled employee, an ultra-nationalist, extremist, or someone with no links that simply has an axe to grind against life itself. What matters is how you respond.

Having the ability to assess a situation and respond appropriately can de-escalate, limit harm and save lives including your own. It can also prevent the attack from happening in the first place.

The Counter Threat Workshop includes lock down, aggression, drug induced violence, active shooter, sniper, hostage taking, IED's, bomb threats, hostile vehicle movements and improvised weapons.

Additionally, the workshop incorporates health and safety policies and procedures. This ensures your current system has appropriate counter threat measures and mitigations consistent with legislative requirements.

Taking advantage of lessons learned overseas and studying tactics used, we are able to put strategies in place to assist in recognising the threat and taking pre-emptive action.

We examine what to do before authorities arrive and how to respond when they are on scene.

Content flexibility. While some content must be included, the balance is set around your specific requirements and incorporates a mixture of learning styles and participant interaction.

Our facilitator has worked in a number of countries around the world. He has served in both the Military and Police.

Holding Diploma's in Police Studies and Health and Safety Management, he is a certified Lead Auditor of Safety Systems and is currently studying Terrorism at St Andrew's University.

WHO WILL BENEFIT:

Quite simply there is no one that won't benefit from a heightened awareness and a greater understanding of how to respond to a hostile threat. Training provides a degree of confidence in that response.

In particular, anyone working in, or responsible for the safety of public spaces. High-density crowds or critical infrastructure benefit by knowing how to respond.

If you're unsure of what to do or how you would respond, the workshop will provide insight on what to expect, and allows you to be better prepared. It provides tools and knowledge giving you the assurance you are doing everything you can to keep safe.

If your organisation requires you to conduct risk assessments or take-charge during threat situations, you will benefit from knowing what to look for and how to respond before, during and after.

If you are wishing to increase your knowledge of the threat environment, you will benefit from attending.

It is also an excellent medium for any organisation wishing to bring all of their frontline staff under one roof for upskilling and ensure a high standard of uniform safety and response across the organisation.

The constantly changing profile, the method, and tactics being deployed, focuses the importance of heightened awareness and being prepared is one of our greatest preventive measures.
